

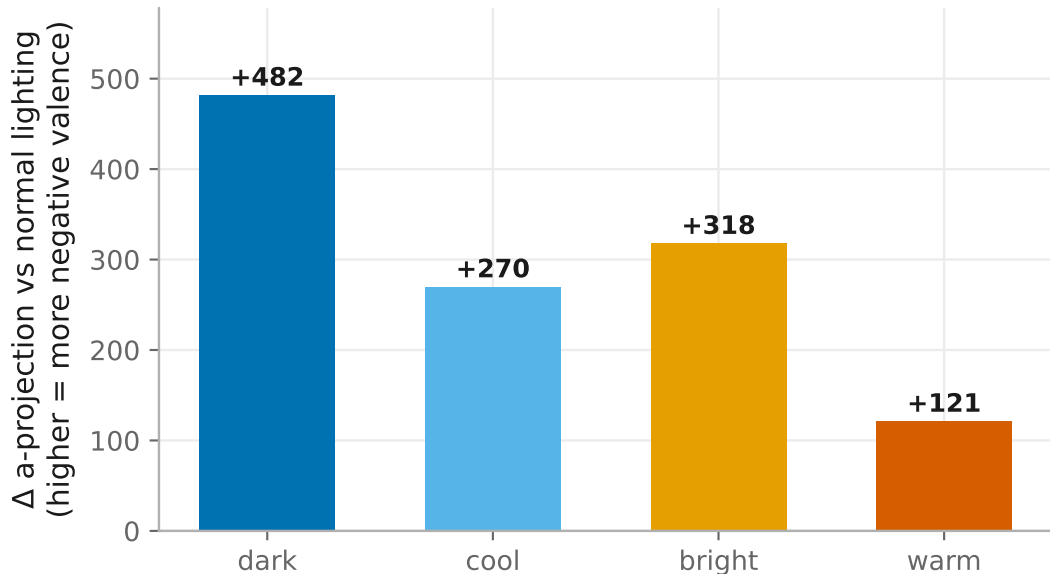

Image lighting is a weak, content-preserving affect knob

Darkening and cooling an image push its valence-axis projection most negative; effects are small ($\sim 2\%$ of content-driven valence) but consistent — lighting works as a subtle affect manipulation that preserves scene content.